

Shelby-Allison Hibbs is a director and award-winning writer, and currently a Clinical Assistant Professor at The University of Texas at Dallas. She enjoys creating theatre with a variety of people because she believes in the transformational nature of performance and theatre training. She primarily focuses on ensemble training, devised theatre, and socially-conscious performance work. Her background includes training in the classics and musical theatre, along with expertise in experimental work of the modern and late twentieth century. She approaches each project with an inquisitive spirit and dedication to excellence.

She grew up in Sherwood, AR (just outside of Little Rock) and primarily studied piano as a child. With few outlets for artistic pursuits, she left the Natural State to train and work with artists in Texas, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and New York. Her dedication and work ethic has led her to numerous opportunities across the country.
